

Abstract Of The Disclosure

A device for triggering personal protective means in a vehicle, an inertial sensor system being provided in a first location, a processor being provided in a second location, and a firing circuit control being provided in a third location in the vehicle. The processor processes the signals of the inertial sensor system and as a function of this triggers the firing circuit control.